Libya, Chad and the Central Sahara By John Wright

Libya and Chad have gone to war with each other several times since Independence, ostensibly over their rival claims to the disputed Aozou strip. The author traces the ethnic, cultural and economic links between them over the centuries and shows how these connections contribute to present rivalries. There follows an analysis of Colonel Moammar Gadafi's aggressive policies towards Chad, which reflect his concern for Lybia's security and desire to increase its influence; his struggle against French influence in the region; and his perception of his country as a liberating force for fellow-Muslims in Chad and elsewhere. The author concludes that continued Libyan interest in Chadian affairs is unavoidable and that mutual hostility will continue into the foreseeable future. There are maps of the trade routes of northern Africa and the central Sahara and Sudan.

Editorial Review

Review

Students will find the extensive footnotes and bibliography especially useful. Recommended for college and university libraries because of its broad yet detailed and competent coverage of a little known and often overlooked area.

...he provides fascinating background information on this important regional relationship that is not readily available elsewhere. At the same time, his account is thoroughly researched, well written, and highly readable.>>>> (Middle East Journal)
