The Bag I'm Taking to Grandma's By Shirley Neitzel

"A familiar story of differing viewpoints between mother and child is presented in charmingly simple cumulative verse and rebuses. A young boy is packing for a trip to visit his grandmother. He fills a shopping bag with his mitt, cars, space ship, wooden animals, his favorite stuffed rabbit, his pillow, a book a flashlight. But then along comes mom with ideas of her own!....This is a real winner....Great fun."--School Library Journal.

PreSchool-Grade 1?A familiar story of differing viewpoints between mother and child is presented in charmingly simple cumulative verse and rebuses. A young boy is packing for a trip to visit his grandmother. He fills a shopping bag with his mitt, cars, space ship, wooden animals, his favorite stuffed rabbit, his pillow, a book, a flashlight. But then along comes mom with ideas of her own! Each object that he decides to take is introduced with a full-page illustration done in watercolor and colored pencil. Then, as it is added to the items "that I'll pack in the bag I'm taking to Grandma's," the book takes a rebus format, so beginning readers will soon be able to "tell" the story as it goes along. Children will identify with the boy, as parents will relate to the mother. This is a real winner that will be great fun for story times, as well as for one-on-one sharing. ?Beth Irish, Orange Public Library, CA

Ages 3[^]-7. The clear, deceptively bland pictures add a witty reversal to a simple cumulative rhyme. Full-page illustrations in line, watercolor, and colored pencil show a boy in jeans and baseball cap packing a bag to take to Grandma's. One by one, he puts in his baseball mitt, all his cars, his space shuttle, animals, cuddly bunny, pillow, book, and flashlight. His bossy mother tells him that the bursting bag's much too heavy, that he doesn't need all that stuff, and she empties it out, with a comment on each object. But he beats her at her own game. The story's told in rebus style, with occasional small pictures in the text, so kids can read along and say the words. They'll enjoy seeing how the boy gets his way. Hazel Rochman
